As one Oracle artist and business woman has come up with an ingenious idea to give that education back to them in however small a way. She brings the kids to the art and the art to the kids.

Carolyn Blair is the owner and artist of Art Under the Oaks in Oracle. Carolyn grew up in a small town similar to Oracle. She is a self-taught artist and has been involved with art since she was a child. She created Art Under the Oaks to share her love of art and offer opportunities to learn art to the kids in Oracle and the surrounding communities. Caryolyn lives on a farm and has incorporated it into her art business. The goal...
Summer is a great time for kids to enjoy the art camps.

Carolyn Blair’s painting depicts a black and white puppy wearing a bow tie. Carolyn Blair’s inspiration comes from the animals on her farm.

Carolyn Blair’s painting is of the Kanally House at Oracle State Park.

The Holiday Art Market at the new Oracle Art Station, 1395 W. American Ave., Oracle, currently has some of Carolyn’s art on display for sale. Carolyn does fine art and custom art. Some of her art for sale is at her Etsy Shop: YesterYearLane.

Hiking the Lava River Cave

Standing at the entrance to the Lava River Cave a blast of cold air blows into our face.

INSIDE THE CAVE
It’s amazing the formations that were formed so many years ago from a volcanic eruption.

We had been warned that the temperature inside the Lava River Cave stayed at 55 degrees but in the middle of an Arizona summer that sounded more like a promise than a threat. The Lava River Cave is outside Flagstaff and is a wonderful geological adventure.

The Lava River Cave is really more of a tube, a little more than a mile long, created during a volcanic eruption over 650,000 years ago. As the lava moved in a molten flow, the outermost edge cooled into solid rock but the lava in the center retained its heat and continued to flow. What was left behind resembled a vaulted hallway stretching deep inside the earth. Lava tubes appear across the earth but only in places that at one time or another have had quite a bit of volcanic activity. In Queensland, Australia an area called Undara was host to a major volcanic event 190,000 years ago that produced over 300 lava tubes but only nine of these tubes have been explored extensively. The longest of these tubes is over 100 miles long.

The Lava River Cave outside Flagstaff is nowhere near this long, stretching under the earth for a little over one mile. We stand at the entrance for a moment enjoying the blast of cool air as it blows over us. A sign near the entrance warns that “squirrels, porcupines and bats” sometimes use the cave as shelter. It would be nice to see a porcupine.

Everybody checks their lights and backup lights before we crawl inside the hellmouth, entering the cave. The entrance is the toughest part, descending steeply beneath the surface, crawling over a series of broken rocks and boulders. Footing is steep and uncertain and we are forced to use our hands to steady ourselves. Then the lava tube levels out. The walls are 30 feet apart and the ceiling mostly maintains a height of about 20 feet, although there are a few places with low ceiling where we are forced to crouch. I am used to narrow, wet caves where one is forced to slither on their belly through the mud between narrow crevices, so this is a nice change. Exploring a cave by walking upright two or three abreast is a new experience. Our headlamps swing about surveying our surroundings. We mostly keep our headlamps aimed at our feet as we walk across the uneven terrain. Lava River Cave is about as user friendly and easy as a cave gets without a guided tour and many families have brought children to experience the cave.

There is another lava tube in Show Low known as the Ice Cave which also blasts cool air out the entrance but Ice Cave goes back nowhere near as far. Among my favorite Arizona caves is Peppersauce Cave outside Oracle. Peppersauce Cave earned its name from a hungry miner working nearby Nugget Canyon who every day sprinkled a little hot sauce on his sandwich. He lost so many Peppersauce bottles that eventually the canyon was littered with them and both the canyon and the cave were... named after the bottles. Early pioneers in Oracle, Arizona reported that the local Apache were keeping a twelve foot long rattlesnake alive deep inside the cave by feeding it live chickens. The Apache claimed the snake was the guardian water spirit or corua for the entire mountain range.

Other caves in the area include Colossal Cave outside Tucson where bandits are rumored to have stashed ill gotten gold.

Nearby Arkenstone Cave is one of only two places in Arizona where the fossilized bones of prehistoric vampire bats have been discovered. Crystal Cave outside Mammoth was a tourist attraction in the 1920s, featured in movie newsreels of the time and included an entrance. Although not unimpressive dirt mound with an entrance. Although not a very big or deep cave what makes Dead Man’s Cave cool is that the cave walls are speckled with white. These white speckles are bone fragments from the Pleistocene. The Ice Age beasts discovered here include saber toothed cats and prehistoric owls. Dead Man’s Cave was something like the La Brea Tar Pits outside Los Angeles, where animals would get stuck in the muck and mire and sink beneath the earth until their bones were be preserved.

Another favorite is Ventana Cave on the O’odham Reservation. This cave is really more of a big overhang and is more famous for its archaeology than its geology. Ventana Cave was inhabited for thousands of years, from big game hunters who used atlatls to hunt long horned bison at the wane of the Ice Age and remained inhabited until just after the collapse of the Hohokam. The walls of Ventana Cave are still adorned with ancient pictographs going back thousands of years.

My friends and I walk the length of the Lava River Cave enjoying the cool air and happy to have a reason to hike in long sleeves in the middle of an Arizona summer. There are clouds of mist and vapor hovering in the air. Little water droplets glisten on the ceiling, shining like crystals caught in the illumination of our headlights. In the colder months these water droplets become icicles. My three friends have never been inside a cave before and are excited. One of them is so excited that he practically skips up and down the stone corridor. This is how he finds the end of the cave, moving far too fast and stopping way too suddenly. His headlamp smashes into the wall and a small trickle of blood, flows down his forehead. Remember to always be careful inside a cave and to always bring extra lights.

Headlamps and flashlights are needed in the Lava River Cave near Flagstaff. It is undeveloped.

Kill All Cats!

John Hernandez
Pinal Nugget

Before all you cat lovers start sending in letters and emails, condemning me and the title above, please be advised that this is not a commentary piece. It is a story of an actual person who believed in getting rid of the cats so much, he started a movement to kill all cats. One newspaper even called Rockwell Sayre “the world’s most assiduous cat hater.”

Although I do not profess to be a cat lover, I do not hate them. I even allowed two cats to live in my home. I would say I owned two cats but no one really ever owns a cat. The cats choose to stay with you as long as you fulfill their needs and they can tolerate their human companions. Having lived with cats, I can understand why a black cat crossing your path is considered bad luck and why cats are associated with witches.

Rockwell Sayre was a millionaire investment broker, real estate seller and banker in Chicago, Illinois. He was also a cat hater. In 1921, he attempted to revise a movement to rid the world of cats by 1925. Articles in newspapers soon appeared about Sayre and his hatred of cats and a war of words he was having with Mrs. George Kessler, National Secretary of the American Cat Association based in Chicago.

Sayre wrote a commentary piece which showed up in newspapers around the country. On Nov. 27, 1921 it appeared in the Bisbee Review. Part of the commentary follows:

Abolition of cats, as a sanitary and health protecting measure is now imperative. Cats have no more place in this world than cockroaches, mosquitoes or flies.

The present movement to be done with cats is gaining popularity all over the world. Cats are now being exterminated every where rapidly. Why?

No other animal has as many diseases as the cat.

A cat will push its nose far down into the throat of an infant and suck its breath until the baby dies.

A cat will jump upon a corpse and tear the face of the dead!

Mrs. George Kessler countered by disputing the claims of Sayre. She called cats the most gentle of creatures.

“They are embellishments to a household and the most model of pets,” she said.

“They are comforts to the spinster. They are untiring friends to those who love and care for them. There is something about a cat that arouses instincts of gentleness and kindness in those who are fond of them. The person who dislikes cats has something harsh in his nature. For cats are the essence of refinement. Instead of killing cats, let us bring laws into being that will make responsible persons care for them.”

Soon, Sayre was being attacked by humane societies and animal protection associations. Animal lovers especially cat owners began writing letters to newspapers denouncing Sayre. One woman wrote that Sayre was teaching our children to be cruel to animals by rewarding them to do cruel things to cats.

Sayre also received letters of support.
Sayre’s campaign to rid the world of the feline species began in the late 1890s. He sent out printed flyers calling for the elimination of cats. In 1907 some newspapers reported that he had offered bounties for dead cats. He would pay 10 cents per cat for the first 100 killed. He also offered a five dollar bonus for the hunter killing the most. A $1 bonus was also paid to the top three hunters. He also offered $3 to any woman willing to give up her cat or cats and have her house fumigated. It doesn’t sound like much but in the 1920s the average daily wage was around $1.50. During the depression there was also many unemployed. Each Christmas he would pay out the awards.

Newspapers reported that “contestants” (hunters) first began delivering and mailing in the heads of cats to Sayre. It was such an untidy practice that Sayre asked them to stop, and said they could send him sworn affidavits as evidence of the cat killings.

In 1924 Sayre’s admitted to the newspapers that his time estimate for meeting the goal of ridding the world of cats would not be met. He announced that he would “spend more money to make the world catless.” He set another goal to rid the world of cats within 10 years. He said that many “cat killing clubs” had been formed around the country. He praised one hunter, a Mr. Thorne K. Sheal of Kingston New York for having killed 22 cats in one week. Sayre claimed that his campaign had rid the world of seven million cats. The newspapers reported that the world’s cat population was estimated at 900 million.

The practice of rewarding the hunters continued until Sayre’s death in 1930 at the hands of his “shell shocked” son, Sidney. Sidney was a veteran of World War I. He had been an officer, a fighter pilot who had his plane shot down twice during the war. He shot his father twice and admitted to the murder. Sidney believed that his 86 year old father was having an affair with the nurse caring for his mother who was an invalid. He planned on killing the nurse but was caught right after shooting his father. Sidney was found guilty of murder but ruled insane and was sent to an asylum.

Even in death Sayre continued his hate campaign against cats. He left a will ranting about war, the death penalty and expressing his hatred for cats in crude poetry. He left $1,000 to purchase boxes of candy to send to 109 people he identified as cat haters as a token of his esteem. Included on the list was the former First Lady Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, who Sayre said once ordered all White House felines executed to protect the song birds.

Queen Marie of Rumania, a county judge the University of Chicago and the Anti-Cigarette League were also on the gift list. Sayre’s called those on the list “fellow warriors in the world war against cats.”

I wonder if upon the hearing of Sayre’s death, that cat lovers rejoiced. Did cats show up at his grave site and scratch the earth to use for their litter box. Maybe they showed up at night to howl and keep Sayre from resting in peace. I doubt it, cats don’t hate, this is a human trait. At least the war was over! Long live the cats!
